Course Objectives: The objective of the paper is to develop sociological imagination amongst the students and to help them understand the connections between theoretical perspectives and foundational ideas in modern social thought.

Course Outcomes : The students find the idea of interdisciplinary imagination extremely difficult in the beginning, given the fragmented nature of our educational system when it comes to schooling and even higher education in certain contexts. The extent of intervention and perspectival change varies in relation to a range of factors operating in the pedagogical space which learners inhabit. However, a definite consciousness shift is clearly visible in the cognitive domain.

Course Objectives: The objective is to introduce the basic sociological themes and theoretical standpoints adopted in understanding Indian society and its processes.

Course Outcome : The students find the idea of interdisciplinary imagination and theoretical investigation of lived realities very challenging given the alienation prevailing in our educational system when it comes to think theoretically about institutional practices in certain contexts. The extent of intervention and perspectival change varies in relation to a range of factors operating in the pedagogical space which learners inhabit. However, a definite consciousness shift can be perceived as a sign of hope at this level as well.

Course Objectives: The objective of the paper is to develop an understanding of the theoretical and feminist standpoints regarding gender and its implications for law and society.

Course Outcome : The students find the idea of interdisciplinary imagination and theoretical investigation of lived realities very challenging given the alienation prevailing in our educational system when it comes to think theoretically about institutional practices in certain contexts. The extent of intervention and perspectival change varies in relation to a range of factors operating in the pedagogical space which learners inhabit. However, a critical consciousness-shift can be perceived as a sign of transformative learning potential of the course.
